Joseph should get the System76 Pangolin because it already comes with Linux installed and stays well under the $2,500 budget. He wouldn't have to mess with installing an operating system, which is nice if he want something that works right away. The Pangolin is powerful enough to handle virtual machines, coding assignments, and light video or photo editing without struggling. It can also run games like Guild Wars 2 just fine since the graphics are decent for an integrated GPU. You can get it with 32 GB of RAM and a 1 TB SSD, which is more than enough for school and still affordable. Another big plus is that it has a lot of ports like HDMI, USB, and Ethernet, so you don't need a bunch of adapters. Overall, it's a simple, reliable Linux laptop that does everything Joseph needs without overcomplicating things
